

Past winners of the Danville AMBUCS' First Citizen Award.

Pictured is (front) Jason Boroughf, Lynn Durocher (AAF), Jim Tessar (Coca-Cola Refreshments), Fred Sammons (AAF) and parents Lori and John Boroughf.

Illinois' Danville AMBUCS Present the 79th First Citizen Award

When the AMBUCS First Citizen award started in 1933, club president Lewis French presented a certificate to A.R. Samuel proclaiming his selection as "Citizen Number One," for being Danville's most useful citizen of the past year. Since then, many people have been honored for their contribution to the Danville community – through personal financial support, fundraising for area projects or volunteerism through a single event or over a span of time of achievement.

The 2011 and 79th recipient, Judd Peck, has been a school board member, served on the local community college foundation board, the symphony orchestra board, the hospital board, the local healthcare foundation, economic development organization board and just about every influential organization board in the area.

A graduate of Danville High School, he went on to graduate magna cum laude from the University of Illinois law school. While contributing his valued time to so many organizations, he also serves as president and CEO of Danville Metal Stamping, one of the area's leading employers and internationally known for its manufacturing of turbine engines and other metal components.

The AMBUCS First Citizen award has gained wide recognition and carries the name of the most active service club in Danville – an honor anyone would be proud to have.

Michigan's Alive After Five

Alive After Five AMBUCS presented an AmTryke to Jason Boroughf of Lawton High School at a Varsity Girls basketball game. This giveaway was the fourth installation of series of events awarding AmTrykes to students at area high schools. Funding for Jason's tryke was provided by Coca-Cola Refreshments in Paw Paw, MI. Jason is the son of John and Lori Boroughf and he is an active student of dance.